

Definition Initials tend to be associated with gilded medieval illuminated manuscripts as meaningful echoes of the texts that follow. But they can also go their own way. BC 3018 is an initial alphabet which draws on traditional typographic discipline regardless of whether it has a place and meaning in today's digital age. The creation of this initial alphabet began as a semester project in 2013 in the Studio of Typography at the Academy of Arts Architecture and Design in Prague. The typeface's name is a leap into the future, a celebration of the 1000th anniversary of its release and at the same time a play on words on the name of the type foundry referring to a negative year, possibly to an alternate history. BC 3018 contains a complete diacritic set in four variants, in addition to the full versal set, numbers, punctuation, currency and other symbols. With the complexity of its thousand-point pixel character, the alphabet is on the edge of what is technically possible for fonts and on the edge of possibilities for initial typefaces.
