

Kakao

Definition Kakao is a font family of stylistically similar fonts loosely based on calligraphy and handwriting. Its creation was inspired not only by handwritten typefaces of the sixties, but also by the diversity of street typography – shop windows, sign plates, adolescent tags, graffiti and even love messages written on walls. Vojta started to sketch the Kakao family in 2011. When drawing Kakao, he frequently referenced Bohumil Lanz and Zdeněk Němeček's book Typeface in Advertising (published by Merkur Publishing House, Prague, 1974). During the course of the twentieth century, publications for arrangers that included manuals for hand drawing of letters were common in Czechoslovakia. These were primarily intended for window dressers and shopkeepers. They taught the proper ways of writing banners advertising discounts, price tag labels, and even taught how to label a whole shop window.
