

Definition The Prkno original type project paraphrases the theme of a popular DIY television series, broadcast for many years by Czech Television under the name of "Recipes not only for Sundays". Prkno was made by breaking wooden vegetable boxes, gluing the pieces together, then photographing and scanning them, with no further adjustments. Each letter measured approximately 30 centimetres, and the first implementation outlined an article "how to make bags from washed milk sachets". This was, incidentally, one of the many recipes that viewers sent to the television series on a regular basis. The Prkno characters are most reminiscent of legendary Czech folk creativity. The result is a lively and bodily typeface, guaranteed to get your attention. Prkno will be at home in large to huge sizes and short texts, but it covers all sorts of world languages and allows you to design at least a whole punk poster with it.
