

Mikser

Definition The designer of Mikser, Filip Kraus, is an excellent draughtsman and therefore another typical feature of the letter set is the distinctive graphic quality and construction of the shapes. The "A", "V", "W" and "M" have peculiar "inflated" curves. The uppercase and lowercase "M", conspicuously reminiscent of the McDonald's logo, thus unwittingly became a sort of logo for Mikser. The mechanically vertically truncated "K" and "R" are in direct contradiction, not only with their uncustomary curves. The capital "E" is reminiscent of a mirror-reversed "3" and the curvy tail of the capital "Q" is also prominent. The lowercase letters confidently add a whole range of shapes: the "p", "r" and "n", which lead with an upper left serif, while the "m" deliberately does not have the same principle and copies the shape of the capital. The "f" and "j" have an apparently simplistically, perpendicularly clipped stroke, the same as the capital "K" and "R". All is enhanced by the apparent disproportion of the characters caused by their uniform width. Despite all these provocations and incitements, it is not a matter of chaos. Quite the contrary – the possibilities of use of Mikser will probably be equally as versatile as the typeface itself. It cannot be ruled out that its use will demand a new method of graphic design, just as Mikser creates its own typeface category.
